SPDR® S&P Metals & Mining ETF - XME

- Base metal prices have been rising from the rebound of global manufacturing activities, as China, Eurozone and the US manufacturing activities are all back to expansion in July, benefiting the metals & mining industry.

- Rising inflation expectations and a weakening dollar may provide further tailwinds for the industry due to its strong positive sensitivity to inflation along with its negative sensitivity to the dollar compared to the broader market.

- Earnings sentiment in the industry has also improved since the beginning of Q2 reporting season, with growth estimates adjusted upward to 177% for 2021.

The Takeaway

As global industrial activities continue to recover, with the help of trillions dollar of fiscal and monetary stimulus injected into the economy, demand for metals may recover quicker than expected. The SPDR S&P Metals & Mining ETF (XME) provides targeted exposures with broad coverage to the industry that may help investors capture the trend of rising metal prices and inflation expectations, alongside a weaker dollar.
