

When it comes to how we view the world, there are two schools of thought: optimism and pessimism. And where one falls along that spectrum is a fundamental human trait¹ reflective of our cognitive biases.

Our life orientation influences how we make decisions and how we define success. In fact, our research² on the life orientation of investors observed a number of differences in terms of financial goal-setting, planning and decision-making, which impacts financial life outcomes.

Determining one's life orientation was a challenge until the creation of the Life Orientation Test (LOT),³ a standard psychology self-help instrument that indicates the level of optimism in a person. The interpretation of the scores provide an understanding of where we are standing in life and how we can be more self-aware of our behavior and subconscious tendencies to move ahead.

Cultivating self-awareness means being able to accurately assess a situation and differentiate between facts and feelings—and having faith in your own ability to move forward constructively.

“A pessimist sees the difficulty in every opportunity; an optimist sees the opportunity in every difficulty.

— Winston Churchill

Having an understanding of one's life orientation can promote more productive communication and ultimately lead to better financial life outcomes. The key is to find purpose in the choice and connect that to the financial life—the intersection between things that matter and the things we can control.

The Life Orientation Test (LOT-R)

Curious as to how you view the world? The Life Orientation Test-Revised (LOT-R)⁴ provided here is a shorter version of the original. Be as honest and accurate as you can throughout. Try not to let your response to one statement influence your response to other statements. There are no “correct” or “incorrect” answers. Answer based on your own feelings, rather than how you think “most people” would answer.

Please circle your response	Agree a lot	Agree a little	Neither agree or disagree	Disagree a little	Disagree a lot
